KSD Violates Parents' Confidentiality

My husband & I were concerned about some school materials our children had been exposed to and when we heard of a specific book that was quite concerning, I read the book myself and decided that it was necessary to submit a reconsideration request to the administration. It was my understanding that this process would be balanced and confidential, but at a Board meeting there were people there with prepared public comments that referenced my reconsideration request and supported the book. The reconsideration request had not been made public at that time.

When I asked administrators about how or why this confidential information was known to these people I was told, "Honestly, we all know that this is a small community. This type of information gets discussed among social circles."

Repeated requests for an explanation of why this breach of confidentiality was allowed went unanswered. This experience made me question the integrity of KSD's processes.

All examples and narratives that KFEI shares are verified.

If you would like to submit an experience or resource that you think the KSD community should be aware of please do so here.

Sources of examples will be protected as confidential, but all accounts must be fully verified and supported by documentation and/or firsthand experience. The integrity of this effort is critical and KFEI reserves the right to use discretion when choosing what to share.
